Re: HIV Education regulations of June 16.
Date: August 10, 2004

Good morning,

I am writing with concern about the proposed guidelines for condom education. With HIV infection rates once again on the rise, we need to be using every tool at our disposal for risk reduction, not just the few that fail to make people uncomfortable. We are in a health crisis, and it is important to make people aware of every option they have for reducing their risk.

It is easy to tell people to stop having sex, but unfortunately this doesn't prevent it. In order to keep our next generations from contracting not only HIV, but also other STIs, we need to help them play their odds. Condoms are no guarantee, but they are undeniably helpful.

Please, do not censor the organizations that are attempting to save the health, and indeed the lives, of all Americans. Let them use whatever means necessary to prevent the spread of this epidemic.

Yours,
